The case for including The Elms within Nailsea Golden Valley seems to be predicated upon an assertion that the The Elms is essentially an urban location with more in common with the Nailsea conurbation than a rural parish. I believe that this assertion is incorrect as the Elms is over a mle from Nailsea town centre and abuts farmland and unbuilt countryside with access to many footpaths rather than urban development. Many of the inhabitants bought their properties precisely because of the The Elms' rural location and the opportunities for rural pursuits and dog walkiing. Where my neighbours are churchgoers it is to Wraxall parish church that they owe their allegiance rather than a church in Nailsea. I strongly beleive that The Elms should remain as part of Wraxall and Failand Parish.
