Comment text:

I have lived in Wraxall for a generation.
It is my home. It has a village feel.
We have been welcomed by the local long term residents and do not feel part of Nailsea.
My children did not attend Nailsea school.
Their first jobs were in Wraxall.
Our windows look out at Tower House lane and Tyntesfield.
I feel strongly that ancient boundaries should be respected. It may throw up little quirks, but is part of the rich tapestry of living in Britain.
It is so sad to think administrative efficiency and the chance to save a few thousand pounds should fly in the face of centuries of heritage.
Our ancestors had a reason for drawing the boundary and we must respect it.
