As a resident of the Elms I like being part of the Wraxall & Failand community. The area faces towards Long Aston and the countryside to the east of Nailsea: I do not feel as much a part of the Nailseas community as I do that of Wraxall, Long Ashton and Failand. The current ward and administrative boundaries work well. Our local representation at the Council level (as well as at Parish level) fits perfectly with the community values of the Elms. Being subsumed into Nailsea and the Golden Valley ward would completely change that. Why change a system that is working well, where the current boundaries are supported by the resident population and where local disillusionment will only increase if the changes are implemented? If you lived here then you's understand that this is a cohesive community that takes care of its environment and aligns well with the current situation.
