I am writing as I believe it would work better to keep the Elms area within Wraxall and Failand in the Long Ashton ward. If the residents of the Elms were represented by a Nailsea councillor this may well cause confusion and it would also go against the aim of creating effective local government and improving electoral equality as the Elms would have the representation of only one Nailsea councillor as opposed to the current representation by two Long Ashton councillors.

In addition I understand that the recommendations should reflect community identity, yet the residents of the Elms have already confirmed by a large majority that they feel more aligned with the countryside of the Wraxall and Failand parish than the built-up community of Nailsea. Any boundary change would counteract the recommendations of the recent Community Governance Review.
