Comment text:

The vast majority of the current wards seem to be logical. They are roughly balanced in size and broadly group similar demographics and societal structures together whilst separating those which differ dramatically. Any radical change seems superfluous. The only slight anomaly seems the sheer population size of the Park Gate ward and perhaps some sensible rearrangement of the boundaries in the Western Wards might be sensible to try to rebalance these and offer improved representation to the constituents in that area, not, on the whole, I do not see any good argument for radical or dramatic redistribution of the remainder and would be inclined to largely leave things as they are. I personally live and operate in Fareham West and am very happy with my current representation and the very sensible boundaries of my ward.
