Related subject: The Elms area

I strongly oppose the move of the Elms out of the Failand and Wraxhall parish. It is a predominantly farming and rural area and many of the residents have long been associated with activities in failand and wraxhall,

The residents would no longer get effective and fair governance as they would become part of a completely different type of community, it would also mean that Wraxhall and Failand would loose an important part of its ward impacting its representatives and budgets significantly.

Moving them into the Nailsea wards would be a regressive step where the residents community identity would be subsumed into a town rather than the rural area that it is, it feels like this is an effort to subsumed into the ever expanding Nailsea Town.
