The existing boundaries are out of date as they no longer reflect the scale of development at Shinfield and Arborfield. With the significant development which has gone on to the south of the borough it means they are under-represented in the council compared to areas such as Woodley and Wokingham town centre which both have around five wards representing their towns. At the moment Arborfield Garrison, and the new developments around it are split around several wards falling part in Arborfield, Barkham and Finchampstead/Swallowfield. I believe the lines around this area of the map should be better arranged to give this area clearer representation at Council and reflect the new housing. This is also similar to Shinfield south which includes a large number of new housing but only a single ward representative. In order for fairness I'd split the ward areas by population / housing numbers so these areas have an increased number of wards and better representation on the decision making bodies.
