I am in favour of a sharp reduction in the number of councillors. The most effective councillors are independents like Beverley Neilsen and Caroline Bovey, working outside an established political party. Their tireless work on behalf of the Malvern community is a model for Conservative and Labour councillors alike, particularly in regard to reducing dangerous speeding within Malvern, and saving Malvern Hills College for educational services and skills provision within our community, and the wider region. We need more independent councillors, and fewer party political appointments, in order to break the dreary 'two party' model that so often bedevils local politics. The Conservative councillors in Malvern district appear to me smug and self-satisfied, blind to the rampant corruption and sleaze within their party, willing to take the allowances but unwilling to put in any real work on behalf of their constituents. And the rampant corruption within the Conservative Party is not hard to detect.... it is on prime time BBC TV. <https://www.bbc.co.uk/iplayer/episode/m000yprm/panorama-david-cameron-and-the-missing-billions>
