I am part of Abbey Ward. I live on Prospect Hill, Enfield . I feel like my concerns are very different to those living in Abbeydale as the ward name indicates. My child attend school within the Batchley & Brockhill ward and when we are moving about the town on foot we are only visiting the town centre and into Batchley/around Enfield it seems to me that the town centre not being included in a ward named Central is madness. My main concerns are the knife wielding maniacs entering our town using the train station which is a mere two streets from me and yet this is not in my ward? My concerns are so very different to those on the other side of the ward in church hill or hither Green Lane but will be very similar to those of the residents in Plymouth road, mounts pleasant and the area around the vicarage crescent/ view and the new flats being build on Britten and Edward street as well as much of Hewell road and Birmingham road. I think that people having to live so close the major public transport terminals and the draw of the town centre, nightlife and daytime events (that horrific bike race being a prime example) as well as the industry within Enfield need specific representation to account for the issues we face. As do those living in more purely residential areas.
