this is far too big an area for local councillors to cover and prejudices the method used by counting population rather than area as rural areas by definition do not have mass population but tend to be left out of any meaningful dialogue in this modern day. lots of elderly residents do not have the technical knowledge to make their views known via computer or email our councillors need to be able to have local knowledge of their constituents plus the rural life which is difficult at the best of times with poor transport links bus service in particular once you reach 70 or 80 or older and thinking can i drive at night
