I completely disagree with the all out election model, because: All out elections are affected too much by national politics, the electorate being swayed by the government sitting at the time of the election. Partial elections ameliorate 'knee jerk' reactions with the overall council changes likely to result in more stability. Long term planning is more radically affected by all out change, this can be detrimental to the city in many respects and crucially in the areas of Education, Health, Social services, Welfare and Transport infrastructure. I would much prefer to see biennial elections, with half the council up for election every two years.
