I wish to object to the amalgamation of Brunswick and Adelaide ward with Regency ward. This seems to create a huge new area, with a complex set of very varied issues for just 3 councillors to solve, combining as it would, for example. the challenges of a highly popular night life area in Brighton with the far more residential nature of Brunswick and Adelaide. This proposal also seems to be at odds with your own objective: Ensuring that the recommendations reflect community identity. Brunswick has a huge community identity, having been built in the early nineteenth century as a complete estate (with its own pub, shops, market hall, and church) and even now has very little in common with much of Regency ward. Its eastern edge represents the old boundary between Hove and Brighton, which is still thought of as a distinguishing mark within Hove.
