Cutting the number of counsellors is surely less representative rather than more? If we have 66 people, that's 66 voices and opinions, from a range of people. Cutting this to 40 means peoples voices are less likely to be heard.
Is this just a move to make the council *more* lib dem than it already is? As much as you may want to be the only voice, that is not what's right for the people. There needs to be opposition from other parties to keep balance.
