I ask that you reconsider the proposal to split the village of Oxshott between different wards in your review of Surrey County Council boundaries. It makes no sense to have different councillors depending on which side of the A244 you live. Oxshott is not a large village and we all use the facilities regardless of which side of the road we live. As an example, local Scouting and Girlguiding groups received a large grant from SCC to help rebuild their dilapidated hut. It was incredibly helpful to have one councillor, Mark Sugden, championing the cause. He really did a great job for all the residents of Oxshott and we will have a wonderful new facility for the whole Community as a result. How would this have worked with a split boundary? What would have happen if the 2 representatives disagreed either fundamentally or even on the best way to proceed? It simply doesn't make sense and will lead to increased bureaucracy with 2 councillors having to be involved in every decision taken for Oxshott. It would make much for sense for the whole of Oxshott to be grouped with Stoke D'Abernon and Cobham where there is a natural affinity.
