Moving Trinity out of Stroud and into Bisley/Painswick makes no sense at all. Trinity is culturally, economically and demographically (as well as geographically) very much embedded in Stroud town. Arguably, the 'alternative Stroud vibe' that people remark on derives from the activities and culture of Trinity, which is home to so many artists, craftspeople, practitioners etc.

The people of Stroud as a whole will have nothing to gain from these proposals, which seem very illogical. Trinity has so much more in common with the rest of Stroud town than it does with the rural Bisley/Painswick. Ward councillors all oppose this move. All that will be achieved is to make the town and district councils have to deal with TWO county councillors on all matters relating to the town as a whole.
