The proposal to have equal numbers of electors per councillor fails to take in to account the different levels of need in certain areas. For instance the rates of deprivation, housing /homelessness issues are far higher in certain areas and this increases the workload for councillors representing these areas. Failure to take this in to account will result in councillors in such areas being overloaded and less able to assist people in real need. The number of councillors in such areas should be increased (not decreased) to help ensure the public get the services they need and deserve.
