I don't believe this council needs additional councillors - if anything I feel that the separate areas should be given their own budgets to spend within them, rather than changes being forced on us by the wider Wirral Council group that residents of Wallasey don't want. With the exception of a small number of conservative councillors who actually keep in touch with constituents in Wallasey and seem to genuinely care about the area and listen to residents, the Council at large is, in my opinion, making terrible decisions for our area, and we don't need more of them. New 20mph zones (that the majority didn't want or vote for), proposed cycle lanes that will kill off local business (that the majority don't want and didn't vote for), and proposed parking charges that will negatively affect residents, tourists, local business and the local economy (that the majority don't want at didn't vote for) are all being forced on us by councillors who don't live in Wallasey. If changes are to be made, I would prefer to see a wholesale change in the management of the Council at large, where block voting by other members who live outside Wallasey Ward they can't override the wishes of local people.
